Panel 1: Catalysing Finance for Ecosystem Conservation Impacts (Local or National)

Financing the conservation of marine and coastal ecosystems is a critical challenge in ensuring Ocean resilience amid increasing pressures from climate change and human activities. This panel will bring together experts from the financial sector, international organisations, and committed businesses to discuss innovative solutions, financial instruments, and pioneering initiatives. It will showcase concrete and scalable local projects and financial models that mobilise capital for ocean protection and accelerate the preservation of marine ecosystems.

How can these tools be deployed at scale? What challenges must be addressed to make such financing more accessible and effective? This discussion will provide insights based on case studies and hands-on experience.

Panel 2: Financing Transboundary Conservation Programmes

By nature, marine ecosystem conservation is challenging as it is not confined to national boundaries. It can span municipal, local, national, regional and international boundaries. To be truly effective, action must be considered on an ecosystem basis, often crossing borders or jurisdictions. This panel will explore innovative financing solutions to support cross-boundary conservation, biodiversity regeneration, scientific research, and economic prosperity at national, international and regional levels, and ways to bridge the funding gap for cross-border ocean conservation. We will tackle questions such as: How can we ensure long-term and large-scale funding for transboundary conservation efforts? What role should philanthropies, private investors and financial institutions play in supporting these initiatives - and how can they collaborate with governments and international organizations in that regard? How can innovative financial instruments support this endeavour?

FINANCING A REGENERATIVE AND SUSTAINABLE BLUE ECONOMY

Room: Salle des Princes

14.15-14.25

KEYNOTE SPEECH

- Costas KADIS, European Commissioner for Fisheries and Oceans

Costas Kadis will draw on his experience as EU Commissioner for Fisheries and the Ocean to highlight the key challenges facing the transition to a blue economy, and how the public and private sectors must come together in this crucial endeavour.

14.25 – 15.15

Panel 1: Uniting forces, the power of blended finance

The ocean economy, valued at over $2.6 trillion and employing more than 100 million people, is a powerful engine of global growth and resilience. Yet, despite its vast potential spanning multiple sub-industries and projects such as renewable energy, shipping and sustainable fisheries, blue opportunities remain underfunded. Less than 1% of philanthropic capital supports regenerative ocean projects. Persistent funding gaps pose a threat to the long-term economic prosperity especially in emerging and developing economies.

This panel will explore how to revolutionize blue finance by identifying innovative de-risking, blended finance and other innovative financing mechanisms, including biodiversity credits, that have the potential to expand the sources of capital deployed in support of blue projects. By leveraging public, multilateral, and philanthropic capital to reduce risk and attract private investment, stakeholders can unlock the ocean's full potential as a high-growth and resilient investment frontier.

It will identify strategies to overcome regulatory and financial barriers, foster public-private partnerships, and catalyse nature-positive solutions that safeguard marine ecosystems. It will also showcase real-world examples and actionable pathways to scale funding for ocean-positive ventures, demonstrating that investing in the ocean is not only a moral imperative but a strategic financial opportunity.

Panel 2: Fuelling innovation and the blue transition through private investment

The lion's share of capital currently flowing into the Ocean comes from private sources, with a limited amount provided by the public sector. This highlights the overwhelming dominance of private capital in ocean-related economic development, and how directing this investment towards blue economy opportunities and innovation is essential for building a resilient and sustainable future.

This session will demonstrate the potential of venture capital and private equity to support incubators, start-ups, intrapreneurs, and industrial innovation in delivering new, sustainable, and regenerative goods and services. Examples from various sectors and regions will be presented to illustrate the case for blue investments as the next frontier of the ocean economy—and the only strategically viable business model for long-term success.

09.10 - 09.40

Panel 1: Shipping Mitigation and Decarbonation

Maritime shipping accounts for 3% of global GES emissions and generate pressures on Ocean biodiversity. The sector has begun to shift its practices in pursuit of the goals set by the Paris Agreement and the preservation of biodiversity. This session will explore the wide range of challenges currently facing maritime shipping on its journey towards decarbonisation: energy efficiency, the adoption of new clean fuels, and the global footprint across the entire lifecycle of ships are among them. Underpinning this transition is the need to mobilise investment at scale, alongside the crucial role of regulatory frameworks—both local and global—in incentivising change across the industry. Speakers will also share current solutions being explored and best practices already in place.

Envisioning the decarbonisation of maritime shipping goes hand in hand with the evolution of ports and coastal infrastructure worldwide. Both face distinct challenges in transitioning to a sustainable model—such as maintaining economic performance while adapting to the impacts of climate change.

In this session, we will explore these issues in depth. Our speakers will share their perspectives on the changes required, as well as the solutions already being implemented in port infrastructures, including electrification and other technological advancements. The discussion will examine the scale of financing needed to support these developments effectively. Furthermore, the session will highlight the leading role that port authorities can play in driving the

ART EXHIBITION

In a striking call to action against climate change, photographer Gérard Rancinan presents a 1.80 x 2.90-meter-wide photograph. Complementing this powerful visual, Caroline Gaudriault unveils an extraordinary book-installation, measuring 100 x 70 cm, displayed on a lectern like a ritualistic object. Together, their works form a compelling dialogue that highlights the urgent environmental challenges of our time while inviting deep reflection on humanity's relationship with the planet and the actions needed to secure our future.

Raul Orvieto, a landscape designer and wildlife artist, is a Signature Member of the American Society of Animal Artists (SAA). His sculptures on display include Almost Blue (2022), Resilience, The Monster from the Abyss (Who is the real monster?) (2022), Triple R Remastered (2021), which reflects the reduce, reuse, and recycle principles, and the evocative Zebra Shark.

Laure Hatchuel-Becker is committed to the conservation of endangered species and biodiversity. The animal world, the plant world, human beings, the planet are sources of inspiration for LHB. She invented the peak, a 3D extension of oil painting that has been characteristic of all her work for almost 25 years. The peak is the element that allows this emotional reconnection of humanity with the natural world and its deep animal nature.
